SPRINT Data Analysis Challenge

CALL FOR ENTRIES

Clinical trials drive medical advances and have a direct impact on health outcomes. Thoughtful, transparent systems for sharing clinical trial data help maximize the contribution of patients who put themselves at risk by participating in clinical trials. NEJM is committed to working with the global medical community to make the sharing of clinical trial data an effective, efficient, and sustainable part of biomedical research.

To explore the potential of clinical trial data sharing, NEJM challenges you to analyze the dataset underlying the SPRINT article and identify an original scientific or clinical finding.

Enter your finding for a chance win a prize and present at the live web summit: Aligning Incentives for Sharing Clinical Trial Data, hosted by NEJM on April 3–4, 2017.

HOW TO ENTER

1 APPLY FOR THE SPRINT DATA

Visit challenge.nejm.org for step-by-step instructions and tips for expediting the application process. An Institutional Review Board (IRB) approval or exemption certificate and a data use agreement are required.

2 QUALIFYING ROUND: ANSWER ONE QUESTION USING SPRINT DATA

The SPRINT data will be made available on November 1, 2016. In the Qualifying Round, reanalyze the SPRINT data to answer one question to progress to the Challenge Round.

3 CHALLENGE ROUND: SUBMIT YOUR FINDING USING SPRINT DATA

The Challenge Round is open from December 1 to February 14, 2017. Use the SPRINT data and any other publicly available dataset to identify and submit a novel clinical or scientific finding.

4 YOU COULD WIN A PRIZE, GAIN BRAGGING RIGHTS & MAKE A DIFFERENCE

Make a valuable contribution towards clinical trial data sharing. Enter your finding for a chance win a prize and present at the live web summit: Aligning Incentives for Sharing Clinical Trial Data, hosted by NEJM on April 3-4, 2017.
